The boom in the artificial intelligence sector is ensuring continued solid economic growth. In the United States, the acceleration in investment is becoming widespread, now extending to activities not directly related to artificial intelligence. Household consumption remains robust, despite persistent disparities between the affluent and less privileged segments of society. Conversely, the real estate market is struggling to recover, held back by high prices and restrictive mortgage rates. In the eurozone, rising defense budgets are beginning to stimulate economic activity, raising hopes for a more pronounced economic acceleration in the coming quarters. The Chinese economy continues to lose momentum due to persistently weak domestic consumption. Exports and investments in cutting-edge technologies such as robotics, artificial intelligence and innovative pharmaceuticals are the main drivers of growth. In Japan, the reduction in the VAT rate on food products is expected to widen the budget deficit in 2026 despite an already strained fiscal situation.

Despite the rise in oil prices due to ongoing tensions between the United States and Iran, U.S. inflation edged down slightly in July from 3.5% to 3.4%, while inflation excluding energy and food fell from 2.6% to 2.5%. The personal consumption expenditures (PCE) deflator excluding energy and food, the indicator favored by the Federal Reserve, remained unchanged at 3.3%. In the eurozone, inflation rose in August from 2.9% to 3.3%, while core inflation (excluding energy and food) fell from 2.5% to 2.4%.

At the traditional central bankers' conference in Jackson Hole in the US, Federal Reserve Chairman Kevin Warsh did not provide clear guidance on future monetary policy, though he did emphasize that disinflation toward the 2% target was not proceeding at a fast enough pace. Although these statements have reignited speculation about a possible tightening of monetary policy, they do not preclude a rate hike at the September meeting, especially since financial conditions have already tightened significantly in recent weeks, driven by an upward shift across the entire yield curve.

The initiative by U.S. Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent to buy back long-term government bonds in an effort to curb the rise in long-term interest rates has not produced the desired results. As a result, the 10-year Treasury yield has not eased, rising to 4.75% from 4.73% at the end of July. In the eurozone, European yields have actually risen even further, with the benchmark 10-year yield moving from 3.21% to 3.32% in Germany, from 4.00% to 4.18% in France, from 4.02% to 4.15% in Italy, and from 3.65% to 3.77% in Spain. Since the beginning of the year, the ICE BofA Euro Government Index has posted a negative return of -1.1%. At the end of August, the average yield to maturity in the bond portfolio was 2.9 % (3.5 % for the benchmark) and the modified duration was 2.4 (6.9 for the benchmark).

Following the sharp decline in artificial intelligence-related stocks in July, equity markets regained upward momentum in August, driven by easing volatility and robust quarterly earnings. However, the strong earnings growth is partly due to one-time factors, notably the revaluation of equity investments in the technology sector, which boosted certain income statements. Against this backdrop, the MSCI All Country World Index Net Total Return, denominated in euros, rose 1.7% over the month. Geographically, the S&P 500 in the United States gained 2.6% (in USD), the Stoxx Europe 600 0.3% (in EUR), the Topix in Japan 3.8% (in JPY), and the MSCI Emerging Markets 3.2%. By sector, materials, technology, and energy led the gains, while consumer staples, real estate, and utilities posted the most notable declines.

In the foreign exchange market, the euro appreciated slightly against the dollar, rising from 1.15 to 1.16. This trend comes amid heightened tensions over U.S. debt, following Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent's announcement that the U.S. Treasury would purchase Treasury bills, as U.S. public debt has just surpassed the symbolic threshold of $40 trillion. This decision has reignited fears of a structural deterioration in public finances, fueling expectations of a sustained weakening of the dollar. The impact spread to the precious metals markets, where gold surged 9.7% (from $4,046 to $4,437 per ounce), while silver posted an even stronger gain (+15.6%, to $66.6 per ounce, up from $57.6 at the end of July).

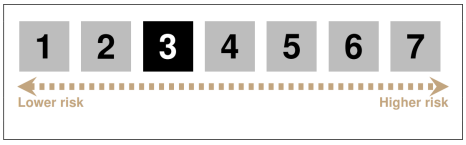

Within the portfolio, the Dutch retail group Ahold Delhaize was purchased as a dividend stock following the decline in its stock price since May. Positions in Uber Technologies and SK Hynix were slightly increased, while the position in Microsoft was reduced. Exposure to silver was slightly increased.
