Managers' Comments

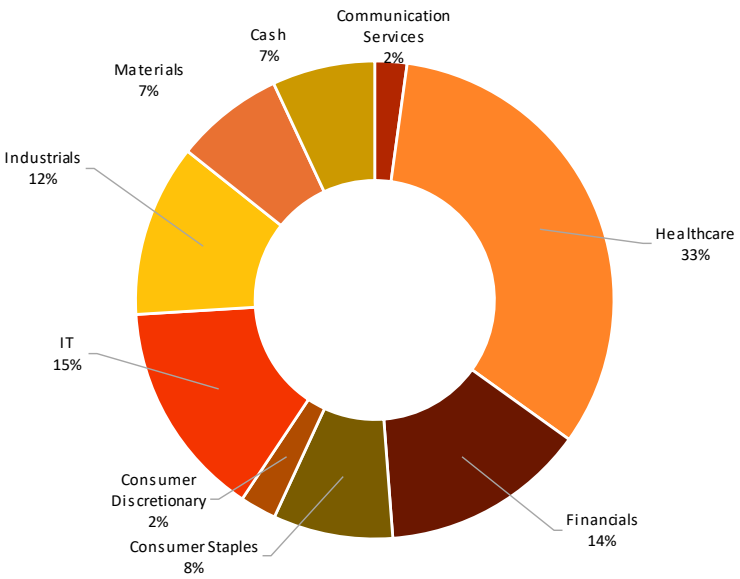

Equity markets resumed their upward progress August, boosted by strong earnings reports and in spite of persistent geopolitical friction and a worrying increase in bond yields. Those strong earnings manifested across most sectors, although impact varied according to the level of expectations already priced in. The consumer sectors were probably the exception, and were weaker during the month, while industrial stocks failed to respond to strong earning. The IT sector rebounded nicely after pulling back in July, and healthcare stocks also benefitted from strong earnings. The Global Age fund benefitted from this positive backdrop, although mixed reactions to earnings from individual holdings meant that aggregate gains were muted. Strength in holdings such as Veeva and Pfizer were offset by weaker performances from holdings such as Bruker and Neurocrine, for example. We added to holdings in Bruker – after having reduced it earlier in the summer - and Linde. We exited the position in Veeva after a very strong run from the levels we had acquired it at, and initiated a new position in Danaher as business performance is improving and the valuation is attractive.
